The British military had largely assumed the duty of maintaining social order and jurisdiction in the colony's early days. Hong Kong's first prison, the Victoria Prison, was built in 1841 to house criminals, triads, and pirates. It was not until 1844 that the Colonial Police Force was established, and the responsibilities of maintaining social order and jurisdiction were separated from the military. In time, the Central Police Station Compound became Hong Kong's first centre of law and order.
